Job search in a tight Labor Market – 5 key takeaways from the seminar

(Need to be completed in at least 100 words in order to get credit)

One takeaway I got from the seminar is that it is hard to a job interview if all you did was get good grades during your time in college. This is because you have lots of free time and it is easy to focus solely on your studies. Another takeaway I got is that when you are looking for jobs, you should be open to possibilities, research the company, and to have questions in interviews. A third takeaway I got is that when you are looking for jobs, have multiple jobs to apply for because it is very unlikely that you will succeed with your first choice, so it is important that you have some sort of backup. A fourth takeaway that I got from this seminar is that in order to get promoted and to get ahead in your work, always strive to do more than simply what is required. The last takeaway I got is to always pull your own weight when it come to doing work and to always get along with others. It is always important to form relationships with others because you never know what benefits you can get from others.
